3 1/2 Minutes, Ten Bullets: Implications for Policing in the 21st Century

About the Training

This training uses the award-winning HBO documentary, 3 1/2 Minutes, 10 Bullets as a platform to examine the past, present, and future of police-community relations in America. It counters some of the false narratives surrounding law enforcement and community and provides police practitioners with the tools to address fear and bias (both explicit and implicit). Drawing on research from the fields of sociology, psychology, criminology, public health, and more, this training also examines the causes and consequences of crime and responses to crime and shares best practices in police officer safety and wellness. Be prepared for difficult, dynamic, discussions, facilitated by two award-winning college professors, and the development of a strategy for building community trust. In the end, participants will be empowered to make law enforcement more responsive to the concerns of communities of color and to bring about positive change for everyone.

About the Instructors

Dr. James Densley is an Associate Professor of Criminal Justice at Metropolitan State University, part of the Minnesota State system. He has received local, national, and international media attention for his work on street gangs, criminal networks, violence, and policing. Densley is the author of Minnesota's Criminal Justice System (Carolina Academic Press, 2016), the award-winning How Gangs Work (Palgrave Macmillan, 2013), and over 20 refereed articles and book chapters in leading social science outlets. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts and graduate of the University of Oxford. Contact: james.densley@metrostate.edu

Dr. Raj Sethuraju is an Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice at Metropolitan State University with over 20 years of community-based activism as a researcher and educator. Inspired by the resilience of the youth and the men in our prison systems, he trains probation agents, community members, and justice personnel on implicit biases and raising consciousness utilizing restorative justice practices. In his latest work, Dr. Sethuraju explores the depths of our justice system and creates a framework in which consciousness becomes the roots of our practices. Contact: raj.sethuraju@metrostate.edu
